1 Right To Left

1.1 Text component

If the Right to Left property is set to true, then a text is output from right to left. The picture below shows a text sample in Arabic that is output from right to left:

1.2 Text In Cells components

1.3 Cross Table component

1.4 Columns on a page

Stimulsoft Reports prints bands until there is a free space on a page. Then, instead of creating a new page, the reporting tool adds a new column on the right. Then it prints data from the top of a page. This happens until all data are printed and page will be exhausted. The columns direction is always from top to bottom, and a mode of showing columns can be different. there are two modes: "left to right" and "right to left". The mode of showing columns on a page depends on the value of the Right to Left property of a page. If the Right to Left property is set to false, then columns will be output in the "left to right" mode. If this property of a page is set to true, then columns will be output in the "right to left" mode. The picture below shows columns on a page output in two modes:

1.5 Columns in the Data Band

"Down Then Right" direction

In this direction the reporting tool tries equally to distribute all rows between columns. Then, after distribution rows between columns, the first column is output. And the column is not output to the end of a page, but until the number of elements that are distributed for this column. Then the second column is output. So the data take as much space on the page as it is required. So data will be distributed approximately equally among all the columns. And all data will be presented on a sheet in a convenient form. The mode of showing columns depends on the value of the Right to Left property of the DataBand. If the Right to Left property is set to false, then columns on the report page will be displayed from left to right. If the Right to Left property is set to true, then the column on the report page will be displayed from right to left. The picture below shows examples of two modes of showing columns on report pages:

"Right Then Down" direction

In this direction lines are sequentially output in the Data Band. By default the mode of output is left to right. Row are displayed - one line in one column. When all rows are displayed in columns in the Data Band, a new Data Band is created and it again displays all the rows in columns. So, the data will take as much space on the page as it is required. The mode of showing columns depends on the value of the Right to Left property of the DataBand. If the Right to Left property is set to false, then columns on the report page will be displayed from left to right. If the Right to Left property is set to true, then the column on the report page will be displayed from right to left.
